CIGARETTE PAPERS.

By JOSEPH HATTON.

Life at the White House, the traditional simplicity which sharecteries the demestic econemy of the White Rouse will be maintained in all its Republican dignity by Mr. McKinley, whose tastes are in sympathy with an uncetantatious hospitality. He has, unfortunately, no children, and his wife, a lady of much personal charm, is in delicate health. Blis mother is still hale and hearty, and to her, he is said, too when the structure of his gutury character, the consistency of his public work, and is attractive individuality. One has hardly ever heard of any man of remarkable character who did not own much of his success to the loving education and inducesce of a good mother, worthly ambitious for her son's moral and intellectual distinction. The McKinleys are a typical American family, and the example of the White rail and intellectual distinction. The Kinleys are typical American inly, and the example of the White of the Republic. A man needs to level-headed to step from the priestation of mere citizenship to chief place in the State, wiedding individual and personal power to belongs to no Constitutional typical property of the property of t eitizen whose business career is above reproach, regarding moral character more than brilliant attainments, our rousins of the United States show that underlying their exciting and often rash and reckless agitations there is the true Republican instinct that keeps the White House free from the achievements of the parvenu, the financial speculator, and the political bounder.

"Our Crowned Republic," The story of the White House from this point of view is more honourable to human nature than the history of the royal palaces of European monarchs. One need not be a Republican to say this; and one finds in the recent coalition against Anarchy someont coalition against Anarchy someon

The result is only too familiar; the first fly of the season, dead in the rim of its frozen atmosphere. According to Mr. Norman Hopgood in the "Author," Mr. W. D. Howells has been doing for preceding authors what they too often do for themselves.

On Friday next the 20th "Stanley Show" is to be opened by the Earl of Warwick. From all secounts it would appear that a very excellent and interesting exhibition will take place.
Over 300 exhibitors are announced as patronising the Agricultural Hall. I think as a popular show and gathering of cyclists the Stanley always scores, although it naturally is somewhat behind its rival, "The National," as a genuine exhibition of first grade what behind its rival, "The National," as a genuine exhibition of first grade its Btanley and it would seem as if the Stanley, and it would seem as if the committee's telegraphic address, "Insuppressible," was most appropriate. The Crystal Palace exhibition opens on Friday. HICHGATE ARCHWAY.
The scheme for the rebuilding of Highgate Archway which was generally approved of by the L.C.c. has these week been carried one step further. The council's engineer has submitted plans and designs for the erection of a single steel girder bridge, with a span of 120tt, to be placed where the present archway stands. The cost, as estimated by the L.C.c. engineer, is 227,000. The sum, however, includes a capitalised amount of 22,000 for expairing and repainting the structure overy 5 years. The design is ornamental, and the bridge will be continued to be the succession of the succes

MR. CHAMBERLAIN ON COMMESCE.

Mr. J. Chamberlain was entertained at dinner this week by the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, under the presidency of Mr. P. A. Muntz, M.—Mr. Chamberlain, replying for "Her Majesty's Ministers," contended that commerce was the greatest of all political interests. He claimed credit to the Government for doing all in their power to increase and develop those great free markets in the world to which we look now, and should have to look still more in the future, for outlets for British trade, now threatened by the hostile and restrictive tariffs of foreign countries. He deprecated the attempt in certain quarters to create an alarmist feeling with respect to German competition with England, and quoted official statistics to show that it was by no mbane so formidable or so disadvantageous to this country as it had been represented to be.
